MASKOM

“Sa Anino ng Liwanag”

A Documentary Film Case Study

In Partial Fulfillment of the Course Requirement in Communication Research

Submitted to:

Mr. Michael Gabriel Gabo

Submitted by:

Sonder Film Productions – Third- Year BA Communication

November 8, 2025

"Sa Anino ng Liwanag"

A Documentary Film Case Study

I. Introduction

According to the Department of Health (DOH) and the Philippine Statistics Authority (PSA), as of July 2023, there are approximately 592,000 visually impaired individuals in the Philippines, most of whom come from poor and uneducated sectors, alongside 2,179,733 individuals with low vision or related visual impairments. Data from the Freedom of Information (FOI) Philippines further shows that from 2019 to 2024, San Pablo City, Laguna recorded 430 individuals with visual disabilities. Meanwhile, a 2022 report by Rappler highlighted that out of the estimated 1.9 million persons with disabilities (PWDs) in the country, only around 353,000 are part of the workforce, revealing a substantial employment gap for PWDs, including those with visual impairments.

Among the population of visually impaired individuals in the Philippines is Jake "Banong" Reyes, a forty-one-year-old 'balut' (fertilized duck egg) vendor from Brgy. San Buenaventura, San Pablo City, Laguna. For fifteen years, Jake has sustained his livelihood through daily vending, traveling on foot across various barangays to provide for his family of four. His younger brother, Jimuel Reyes, aged thirty-six, shares both his visual impairment and vocation. The experiences of Jake and his brother reflect the broader socioeconomic and daily challenges encountered by visually impaired individuals in the Philippines, highlighting the intersection of disability, livelihood, and family responsibilities.

This case study aims to examine the life and struggles of a visually impaired Filipino father whose motivation to persevere is derived from his children. By analyzing his narrative, the study seeks to provide insight into the lived realities of individuals with visual impairments, emphasizing not only their obstacles but also their resilience, adaptive strategies, and dedication to sustaining their families.

II. Background

This study centers on a forty-two year old balut vendor Jake Reyes, but known by many as "Tatay Banong". Though he shared his given name during the interview, he prefers being called Banong. He resides in Barangay San Buenaventura, San Pablo City, Laguna with his family of three — his wife and two children, aged 14 and 10.

Born with a visual impairment, Tatay Banong has been blind since birth. Despite this, he leads a life defined by perseverance and humility. His eldest child, Gerald, a Grade 9 student, serves as his constant companion in selling balut at night, while his youngest occasionally helps when needed. His wife supports the household by taking on various jobs such as sewing, weaving nets, and sorting materials for planting projects in their community.

Before becoming a balut vendor, Tatay Banong worked a variety of jobs to earn a living. After finishing high school at Pag-ibig at Pag-asa, he began selling frozen goods house-to-house alongside his best friend. He started this even while still in high school, selling once a week to teachers and neighbors after classes.

When his best friend eventually went abroad, Tatay Banong continued the business with his wife, selling frozen goods door-to-door. This work experience became his early training in entrepreneurship, which later helped him manage his balut selling business.

He also shared that one of his teachers personally sponsored his education during high school — a gesture he deeply treasures. To this day, he occasionally visits her at the school.

In 2010, Tatay Banong decided to shift to selling balut full-time. What began as helping a friend became his own livelihood. He now walks long distances every night, selling 'balut' and 'penoy' across several barangays — Dolores, San Pedro, San Lucas, Gawad Kalinga, and Putol — before returning home near midnight. He typically leaves the house around 6:30 PM and returns between 10:00 and 11:00 PM, depending on the night's sales. On good days, he earns ₱500–₱1,000, though some days are slower.

Despite the unpredictability, his income generally sustains his family's daily needs and his children's schooling. He prefers walking and selling directly to customers instead of setting up a fixed stall, believing that he could earn more from selling by walking through barangays instead of having a stall which stays in a certain place. Tatay Banong is the second of five siblings. Among the siblings, two are visually impaired—himself and his younger brother Jimuel, who is five years younger. He explained that their condition is hereditary, passed down from their great-grandfather's generation, and that not all of their siblings inherited it.

Like Tatay Banong, Jimuel is also a balut vendor and works as an on-call masseur in their area. Jimuel serves as the president of the PWD Association in Barangay Palapakin. Like Tatay Banong, he also faces livelihood challenges but takes pride in representing and organizing other members of the association. Together, they reflect a shared sense of leadership and community involvement, showing that persons with disabilities in their area support one another in small but meaningful ways.

He lives with their father, one of their siblings, and a nephew. Their mother has passed away, but their father remains strong and present, living nearby within the same compound. The family's houses are built close together, forming a small, tight-knit community where everyone sees each other daily. Two of his siblings work in stable jobs: one at Pepper Lunch in SM, and another as a Green Cross distributor.

During the day, Tatay Banong stays home to handle household chores. He cooks, washes dishes, and cleans the house, preparing for another night of work. His eldest son, Gerald, joins him after school, guiding him as they sell balut through the streets. Gerald's class schedule helps balance both school and work — he studies in the afternoon, allowing him to sell in the evenings. They walk for hours, often in unpredictable weather. When it rains, they continue selling with umbrellas, only stopping when the downpour becomes too heavy. Tatay Banong buys his duck eggs from the local market, cooks them himself, and then sells them fresh at night.

Over the years, Tatay Banong has met countless people through his nightly walks — some of whom have shown him great kindness. He recalls several touching moments when strangers offered unexpected help:

One customer once gave him a thousand peso and told him to buy rice instead of accepting payment for balut. Another time, a driver stopped his car just to hand a hundred peso to his son, saying, "Para kay Tatay yan." and a family in San Lucas once gifted him ten kilos of rice after learning about his situation. These gestures, though small to some, deeply moved Tatay Banong and his family. For him, they are proof that compassion still thrives among people, even strangers.

He also recounted difficult moments, such as losing part of his merchandise after an accident involving a vehicle. He mentioned that he was compensated for the damages, However his brother who also experienced such an incident was not. Instead of dwelling on frustration, he said that he would choose to move forward and salvage what he could, demonstrating his practicality and resilience in the face of loss.

According to Tatay Banong his blindness has been present since birth, but during his younger years, he could still perceive colors and faint shapes up close. Unfortunately, over time, his eyesight completely deteriorated.

During the pandemic, a customer offered to sponsor an eye operation for both him and his brother. The visitors told him that they were from a private organization, but did not state the name of the said organization . They brought gifts like rice, canes, and a radio, and claimed the operation would take place in Bulacan. However, Tatay Banong grew uneasy. He wondered why the surgery would be held there instead of a major hospital in Manila. After seeking advice, he declined the offer, suspecting it might not be safe.

Now, he accepts his condition fully and focuses on maintaining his overall health. He occasionally suffers from leg and foot pain due to long walks, but he remains physically strong and capable.

Tatay Banong shared that they never once felt that they were different from the rest of the citizens because they had long-time friends that guided them and made them feel that they are not “special” that they are just normal people, the said friends would ask them what they could do and if it’s beyond their expertise, then their friends would do it. The friendship they have with these people have been present ever since his brother Jimuel was 10 years old.

When asked about his dreams, Tatay Banong simply says he has no personal ambitions left for himself, only for his children. He shares that he’s already content with what he has and is only looking out for his children’s well being. Tatay Banong’s life is grounded in simplicity, resilience, and gratitude. He believes in living honestly and treating others with kindness. He does not seek fame or recognition; he only wants people to know him as he is — a hardworking man and loving father.

His strength comes from his family, his sense of responsibility, and his faith in the goodness of others. Through saving small portions of his income and working despite his disability, he sets an example of perseverance for his children and community.

The story of Tatay Banong and his brother Jimuel reflects the quiet courage of ordinary people who persist despite adversity. Their lives prove that disability is not an inability .Every night, Tatay Banong walks the streets of San Pablo with his son by his side — not guided by sight, but by faith, dedication, and purpose. His story is not merely about selling balut; it is about his dedication in providing for him and his family.

III. Problems/ Challenges

Tatay Banong face several struggles in their daily lives as he strives to make ends meet through selling balut across different barangays. Despite Tatay Banong’s visual impairment, he and his brother, Jimuel, continue to work tirelessly, guided and assisted by his young son, Gerald. The nature of their livelihood requires long hours of walking and traveling from one barangay to another, exposing them to harsh weather conditions and physical exhaustion.

On separate occasions, while following their usual routes, Tatay Banong and his brother each experienced distressing incidents. In one instance, as Tatay Banong was walking the streets, a speeding vehicle sideswiped his basket, resulting in the loss and damage of some of his goods. Fortunately, the driver quickly offered money to compensate for the damaged items. In contrast, his brother Jimuel encountered a similar incident on a different route, but the driver fled the scene without providing any assistance or compensation, leaving him to accept the situation instead. These kinds of experiences test their patience and resilience when it comes to their job and life itself. Nevertheless, they continue to thrive in hopes of a good life for their family.

Moreover, their income does not suffice to cover the costs of Tatay Banong's medical condition. A turning point occurred when he was approached by an organizational group offering medical assistance and the possibility of undergoing an eye surgery. This encounter brought them a glimmer of hope, but it also presented new challenges, particularly concerns about the reliability of the group providing medical assistance as they offered to conduct the eye surgery in Bulacan rather than in Manila, where established medical facilities are more reliable. The situation highlighted the need for consistent and accessible healthcare support for persons with disabilities (PWDs).

IV. Conclusion

The conclusion of Tatay Banong's story centers on his dreams that are not only for himself, but for his family who continues to give meaning and direction to his life. Despite the darkness brought by his visual impairment, his vision remains clear: to see his family live with dignity, purpose, and hope. His nightly journey as a balut vendor is more than a means of survival, it is a testament to his enduring love and faith in what lies ahead.

His experiences also shed light on the bigger struggles faced by persons with disabilities (PWDs), especially those who are visually impaired. Though not directly experienced by him, he considers the hardships of accessing healthcare, sustainable livelihood programs, and consistent community support as something that limits opportunities for many people like them. While there are gestures of kindness from strangers and some existing local assistance programs, these remain temporary measures rather than long-term solutions that could empower persons with disability.

Together with his son Gerald, Tatay Banong reflects on the kindness of those who choose to stay beside them, their neighbors, customers, and strangers who become part of their light. Their shared experiences reveal that even the smallest gestures of compassion can illuminate the hardest nights. These are what make Tatay Banong a persevering individual especially when it comes to his family.

Though there may be no immediate or abrupt solution to Tatay Banong's challenges, this case study aims to serve as a way to tell his story and call for action, urging both the community and relevant institutions to strengthen their commitment to inclusivity and support for PWDs and regular works like Tatay Banong's. It highlights the need for more comprehensive programs that address not only financial or medical needs, but also opportunities for self-sufficiency and social participation.

In summary, Tatay Banong's story reminds us that true progress lies not only in recognizing the struggles of those with disabilities but in actively creating a society where their resilience is met with genuine support, compassion, and equal opportunity.

References:

busybee. (2024). Latest Data of Visually Impaired and Hearing Impaired in the Philippines. Www.foi.gov.ph. https://www.foi.gov.ph/agencies/doh/latest-data-of-visually-impaired-and-hearing-impaired-in-the-philippines/

Ines, J. (2023, April 29). Still a long road ahead: PWDs struggle to join Philippine workforce. RAPPLER. https://www.rappler.com/newsbreak/in-depth/persons-with-disability-struggle-philippine-workforce/

National Council on Disability Affairs | Empowering Inclusion of Persons With Disabilities. (n.d.). National Council on Disability Affairs. https://ncda.gov.ph/

Below is a detailed overview of the storyline and narrative flow of the documentary film, outlining the sequence of key themes, events, and emotional beats that guide the viewer through its central message and creative vision.

Title Description:

- Sa Anino ng Liwanag (explanation: Sa Anino ng Liwanag shows that Light and Shadow coexist together. Liwanag or Light symbolizes the subject's family, the guiding light that shines his path. Anino or Shadow symbolizes the subject itself, seeking strength and direction from their glow. However, throughout the film, symbolism can also change. The love, perseverance, and hope from the subject could represent the Liwanag, while Anino represents the family that follows and supports the subject's sacrifices. Sa Anino ng Liwanag reflects the beauty of the story and its duality— in every light there is a shadow, and in every shadow light exists.)

Logline:

- A documentary film about a blind vendor who, though living in darkness, finds light through the love and warmth of his family and those who guide him through life.

Theme / Central Idea:

- This documentary focuses on Tatay Banong, a visually impaired balut vendor whose nightly journey through the streets becomes a symbol of strength, dignity, and love. Despite his blindness and the weight of struggles, he continues to persevere, walking miles in the dark to provide for his family. His story is not just about survival, but about the quiet heroism of ordinary Filipinos who choose hope over despair. In every step he takes, the light of his determination outshines the darkness that surrounds him.

Purpose / Goal:

- The purpose of our documentary film is to share the heartfelt story of a blind vendor who found light through his family. This story is filled with hope, love, and faith that reminds us of the power and importance of family. As the camera follows our subject's journey, we hope to inspire others to find courage in their own struggles and hardships — because sometimes, it is in those very moments of darkness that we discover how to rise again.

- We also hope that this film encourages aspiring filmmakers to seek stories with heart and to give voice to those who are often unheard. This documentary stands as proof that filmmaking is not just about capturing images, but about sharing emotion and bringing light into a world often cloaked in shadows and darkness.

Target Audience:

- Filipino youth and families who can be inspired by the story of perseverance and parental sacrifice.

- Viewers interested in human-interest stories and social issues, such as poverty, disability, and resilience.

- Students, media and journalism practitioners, and film enthusiasts who want to learn how to capture the life of ordinary people with extraordinary stories.

- Festival-goers and international audiences seek authentic Filipino narratives and cultural perspectives on everyday struggles.

STORY STRUCTURE

Synopsis:

Sa Anino ng Liwanag follows the inspiring journey of Tatay Banong, a visually impaired balut vendor from San Pablo City, Laguna. Born without sight, he has spent his life walking the dimly lit streets each night, guided only by faith, perseverance, and the steady hand of his son, Gerald.

Through every step, Tatay Banong proves that his disability cannot darken a determined heart. His story is one of quiet strength — a father's devotion, a family's resilience, and the simple dignity found in honest work.

More than a portrait of hardship, Sa Anino ng Liwanag is a story of courage and light — a reminder that even in the absence of sight, there is always vision.

Brief Story Summary:

Introduction

Jake Reyes, also known as Tatay Banong, is a 41-year-old vendor who sells balut (fertilized duck eggs)around Barangay San Pedro, extending to Barangay San Lucas, and the surrounding areas of Gawad Kalinga or Putol, in San Pablo City, which he covers entirely on foot. He was born visually impaired, and is accompanied by his eldest son, Gerald, 14-year-old and is currently studying, who assists and guides him along the way. Despite his condition, his family remains his greatest source of strength and inspiration to preserve in life.

Background

Tatay Banong lives in Brgy. San Buenaventura, San Pablo City, Laguna. He has a wife named Rosalinda Reyes and two children, Gerald and Gerwin, 14 and 10, who are both studying. His wife takes on different kinds of jobs, sometimes sewing fishing nets, and other times planting crops.

In their area, the houses of his siblings are built close to each other, including that of their father. There are five siblings in total, and some of them are already married and working. Among the five, two of them are visually impaired—Jimuel Reyes, who also sells balut (boiled duck eggs) in a different area, and sometimes works as an on-call home massager. Tatay Banong mentioned that their condition is inborn and inherited from their great-great-grandfather.

As for his educational background, he finished high school at the Paaralan ng Pag-ibig at Pag-asa (PPP). He also shared that one of his teachers from PPP was the one who helped support his studies during high school, and that he still visits this teacher from time to time.

During the time he was studying and working, he said that he never experienced discrimination or bullying, perhaps only when he was younger, but now, he hasn't encountered anything bad from the people around him, especially from his customers. He mentioned that when he got married, he sometimes thought that others might have said something negative about him because of his condition, but those were only his own overthoughts, as no one ever said anything directly to his face.

When asked about his dreams, he said that everything he wishes for is only for his family. For him, that alone is enough, he doesn't ask for anything more for himself. However, he mentioned that if given the chance, he would like to have his own small business, a place where he could sell and work independently.

Lastly, when we asked him how he would like to be known by others, he simply said that it's through his work as a vendor. He wants people to see him just as he is—nothing more, nothing less. He said, "Hindi ko kailangan na mag-angat ng aking sarili, kailangan ay kung ano ninyo ako nakilala ayun na 'yon."

Career

Before Tatay Banong began selling balut, he was already selling frozen foods, going house to house, offering them to teachers, and selling after classes. During that time, he was accompanied by a close friend who is now living abroad. This small business for 15 years began even before he got married. When he eventually had a family of his own, selling continued to be their source of income to meet their daily needs.

Now that he sells balut, his eldest child usually accompanies him, and sometimes one of his nephews helps out when his child is busy with school. They buy the balut from the market and cook it themselves before selling. They usually start selling around 6:30 p.m. and finish by 11 p.m., depending on how fast or slow the sales go that night.

He mentioned that he doesn't use any walking stick or cane while selling since his child or whoever accompanies him is there to assist him. They cover quite a distance, walking through three barangays with patience and determination. There are times when they are caught in bad weather, but they still continue, relying only on an umbrella. However, when the rain becomes too strong, they choose to stop and take shelter until it eases before resuming their selling.

According to him, his earnings are usually enough. On good days, when all their goods are sold out, he earns around ₱1,000 and on slower days, about ₱500–₱700. Even though their small business is sometimes just enough for their family's needs, Tatay Banong still dreams of one day having a better business of his own, perhaps a grocery store where he can have his own place to sell.

Story Flow:

(Film Emotional Progression : Curiosity - Inspiration - Peace)

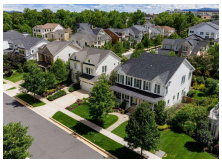

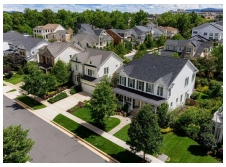

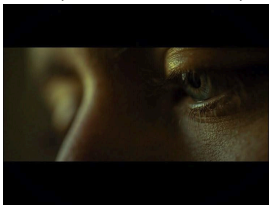

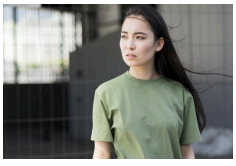

INTRODUCTION / SETUP

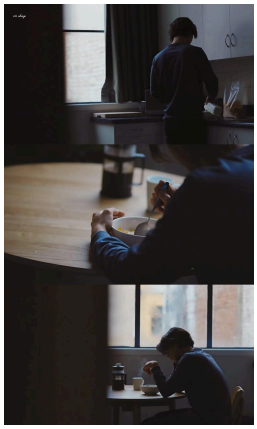

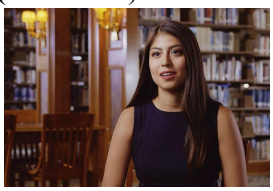

ACT 1

Objective: Introduce the main subject (Tatay Banong)

- Context / Background: The film will start by showing the location or surroundings, followed by establishing shots. In the opening part, a data statement will be shown through 'text on screen', which will then be followed by a voiceover from the main subject. After setting the mood, a montage of the subject's morning routine will follow, showing scenarios he is mostly alone, and accompanied by his voiceover taken from the interview questions.

- Emotional tone - Tone begins with an isolation and stillness conveying through quiet visuals of his surroundings, where ambient sounds and natural setting speaks louder.

Scene	Content	Audio / Dialogue	Visuals
Opening Scene / Establishing Shots	Begin with showing the place/location or barangay of the subject	Natural setting sounds / Ambient sounds	Drone Shot
Data Statement (Text on Screen)	Highlights the statistics or total number of visual impairment cases in the Philippines	"As of July 2023, about 592,000 Filipinos are visually impaired and 2.18 million have low vision (DOH, PSA). From 2019–2024, San Pablo City recorded 430 cases (FOI). Only 353,000 of 1.9 million PWDs are employed nationwide (Rappler, 2022)."	Appear text (Drone Shot)
Interview (Voice Over)	Personal statement or reflection on how the subject perceives the world around him	Through a voice over, the subject will share how he sees the world or how he would describe in his own perspective its real beauty.	Close-up Shot to the subjects eye, then short montage of his Son (Medium Shot)
Daily Routine	Montage of the	Natural sounds —	Compilation of his

(Morning)	subject's daily routine in the morning, mostly about the things he do alone	gentle clattering of plates as he washes them, sounds when he repairs/ fix things on his own. After short montages, there will be another voice over from the subject where he narrates what he does in the morning and how he manages to do these things despite his condition. (continuous voice over) Then, the voice over will end with his answer about who he lives with at home.	daily routine but in chronological order. Medium Shot and Close-up Shot
(Option)In Frame Interview	The subject appears on screen, interview type as he answers the interview question	Then, the voice over will end with his answer about who he lives with at home.	Medium Shot (Interview)

DEVELOPMENT / CONFLICT

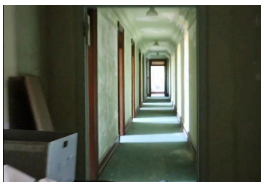

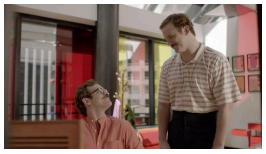

ACT 2

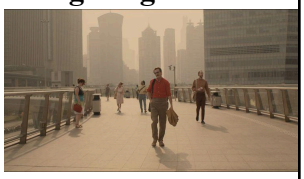

Objective: This part focuses on the subject's family background and life; highlighting his hardships and perseverance as a vendor, together with his son; as well as the personal problems he faces due to his condition. Will also include the background story of the subject's sibling and share his own personal problem.

- Context / Background: The sequence begins once more with a calm family scene, shifting to shots of them preparing the balut they sell. The story then unfolds to reveal the struggles of the subject and his son as they walk through dark streets and across three barangays. It then concludes with another interview where he shares the difficult moments in his life, particularly those related to his condition. Here, he also reveals that he and one of his siblings share the same condition, and shares the story of an operation that did not push through, and lastly share their different struggles as a vendor and as a person.

- Emotional Tone: A bittersweet tone — a blend of tenderness with the connection the subject has with his family and at the same time ache showcasing the hardships and struggles of their daily lives.

Scene	Content	Audio / Dialogue	Visuals
Short Conversation of the Family (Montage of them eating or doing something together)	Highlights the relationship or bond of the subject with his family	Ambient sounds — noise from their conversation and things they are doing.	Wide Shot (Conversation Scene)
Process or cooking of the product (balut)they will sell.	The scene captures how they prepare and cook their product, while the subject narrates through a voice over how he started his work in selling.	Short ambient sounds, then transition to voice over of the subject narrating how he started as a balut vendor. His background history will also indicate, narrating the works he did before he got married to his wife.	Medium Shot (Handheld)
Preparation of the balut before they go	Will reveal that the subject's sibling is	Before leaving the house, the subject	Wide shot for palabas sa bahay

out their house	also a balut vendor.	will narrate or tell that his sibling also sells balut, through voice over.	then transition to medium shot handheld
Scene of the subject's brother while selling	The camera follows his night walk. Narration of his struggles as a person working with disability,talks about his other jobs, and explains how hard and far the night routine of his brother is.	Ambient sound –silent walking at night with his companion. Voice over, narrates his bad encounter with a customer, how hard it is to work with his condition, will talk about his other current jobs (gig as a drummer, massager) and also how his brother or the subject sells his own balut, how long and far they walk through.	Medium Handheld Shot
Scenes of the subject and his son walking through the dark streets at night while selling.	Conversation between the subject and his son while selling, highlighting the long distance they cover on foot during their nightly route.	After the voice over short ambient sounds again to set the mood. Then, transition to them silently walking. Short conversation of them as they walk through the streets together.	Medium Handheld Shot  Tilted shot habang naglalakad

		After that, the subject's voice-over explains the struggles they encounter as they sell at night (times when sales are low and describes the challenges of making a living given his condition.),and the reason why he chooses not to bring a cane with him (he explains that it's because his son is already there for him).	 This wide shot is option, depends on the lighting
In Frame Interview of the subject's son	An interview with the subject's son, where he shares the struggles they face in their work and the unspoken hardships he noticed that his father keeps to himself.	The subject's son narrates the reason why he chose to accompany his father despite his young age and also as someone who is still studying. He will also narrate how hard it is to walk around three barangays. Lastly, shares the problems he sees that his father tries to hide, but for him, he can feel them and wants to find a way to help and ease his father's burden.	Medium Shot (Interview)
Scene of the subject and his son interacting with the customers	Short conversation highlighting how they sell their products.	Short ambient sounds, then voice over of the subject narrating their good relationship with their customers.The	Medium Shot (Handheld) narration will then lead to the experience they encounter with a customer (the group that offers him and his brother free eye operation).

In Frame Interview of the subject	Highlights the experience of the subject with his customer wherein supposedly will support them for their eye operation.	Through an in-frame interview, he shares that a customer once offered to support their operation, including his sibling who is also blind. However, it did not push through because of their own decision.	Medium Shot Interview mixed with Close-up Shot
In Frame Interview of the subject's brother	This part provides supporting insights regarding the cancelled operation and includes his reflections about how grateful they are for those people guiding them	Through the same in-frame interview, Jimuel, the subject's brother, will also share his side of the story, as the offer was meant for both of them. Give insights to those who are willing to help them. Highlight the part that they are also receiving financial assistance and as well as him as the president of the PWD. Will explain the future projects and plans they have for PWD.	Medium shot interview
Another scene of the	A short scene or	Short ambient sounds	Medium Handheld

subject and his son walking through the dark streets at night while selling.	moment of them interacting and communicating with their customers.	before transitioning to a voice over from the subject. Through voice over, shortly explains that despite their bad experiences, there remain good and trustworthy customers, and how he expresses his gratitude to the people who support them in the midst of life's challenges	Shot

RESOLUTION / CONCLUSION

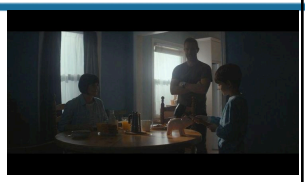

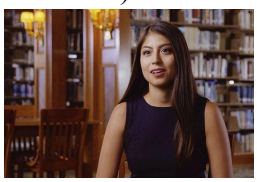

ACT 3

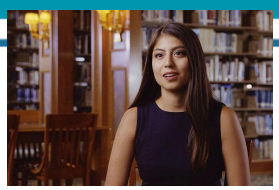

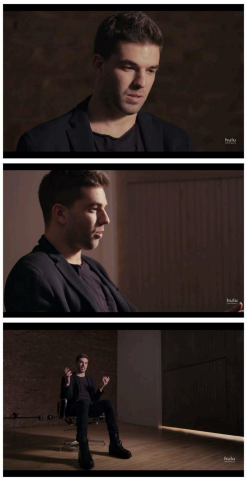

Objective: The conclusion of the film will focus on the narration of the subject's dreams for himself and for his family. Perspective of the subject and his brother about the people who are willing to help and stay beside them. Lastly, their thoughts and reflections about their journey in life and narration of the idea of having or being someone's liwanag.

- Climax or Turning Point: The climax of the film unfolds as, despite living in darkness, the subject finds light through his family and the people he meets along the way. This part will portray how love and support can give a person the strength to continue in life. Through this aspect, it shows that even those who live in darkness can still find their light. And this light does not only come from his family but also from within himself — for he has learned to stand strong amid life's challenges. Because of this, the dreams he holds for his family are now within reach.

- Emotional Tone: How the light overcomes the darkness — inspiring and uplifting tone wherein peace has found in their journey.

Scene	Content	Audio / Dialogue	Visuals
In Frame interview of the subject	Talks about his dreams and ambitions in life	Through an in-frame interview, the subject will share his dreams and aspirations in life, starting with those for himself, followed by those centered on his family.	Medium Shot (Interview)
In Frame interview of the subject's youngest son	Talks about how grateful he is for his father	A short in-frame interview with the youngest child, where he expresses his gratitude to his father and describes how he sees him.	Medium Shot mixed with Close-upShot
In frame interview of the subjects's eldest son	Talks about his own dream, his future plan for his family, and talks about what's something that can make the subject happy.	In this part, there will also be an in-frame interview with his eldest child, where he shares his dreams in life, how he plans to give back for all his parents' sacrifices, and what he believes would truly make his father happy.	Medium Shot (Interview)
Scene of the subject with both of his sons doing something	Narration of the subject showcasing his love for his sons	Through a voice-over, the subject, as a father, expresses how much he loves his	Wide Shot (rule of thirds and handheld) mixed with medium shot together.		children and what he is willing to sacrifice and do for their well-being and a better life.

In Frame Interview of the subject's brother	Talks about how hardworking the subject is and how proud he is for his kuya.	Another in-frame interview that will feature the subject's sibling, who will share what he has witnessed about his brother's hard work and what he believes is his greatest sacrifice for his loved ones. The sibling will also recount his courage and strength ever since their mother passed away when they were still young. It will show how they both managed to endure life's challenges together. Finally, the sibling will also express how proud he is for the subject	Medium Shot (Interview)
In Frame Interview of the subject	Highlight the reason why he still continues to work and live	For the final in-frame interview, the subject will also share and	Medium Shot (Interview)

	despite all struggles in life.	highlight why he continues to work despite all hardships and how he would want people to see and remember him.
Montage scene of the subject doing something alone.	Message for people who also have disabilities like him, and explanation of how he was able to still see the true beauty of the world despite all the darkness. As well as how the people around him make him feel that he is not different from others.	Through a voice over, the subject will share his message and advice for those like him who are also living with disabilities and fighting for the hardships of life. He will also explain how he is able to see the real beauty of the world despite all the darkness that tries to cover it. Lastly he will share here about the people around him who never made him feel that he is different from the others.	Close-up Shot mixed with Medium Shot  t
For the last part of the film, another scene or moment of the family together (if possible a visible light bulb above them or a vivid light behind the subject.) Part where the title will show up.	Narration of how he found the light and his final message about how important family is in his life.	For the final scene, through the subject's voice-over, he will share how he found the light that for him, does not need to be seen but to be felt. In the end, he will also explain how important family is in his life	Wide Shot
Text on Screen before Ending Credits	A text indicating information that will be shown for those	For everyone who wishes to offer help and support to "Tatay	Close-up Shot, Medium Shot and Wide Shot (Montage who wish to offer help or support.	Banong"and his family you may contact our team"contact info"or directly to them "contact info"	of all the scenes with blurry effect).

TECHNICAL DETAILS

Element	Description
Estimated Running Time	15 minutes
Interviewees	Jake Reyes (Banong), Gerald Rafael Reyes; Rosalinda Reyes, Gerwin Reyes, Jimuel Reyes; Other Relatives, Banong's Customers, Neighbors
Filming Locations	Brgy. San Buenaventura, Brgy. San Pedro, Brgy. San Lucas, Putol (Gawad Kalinga)
Film Visual Style / Tone	Emotional and inspiring, using B-Roll to capture authentic and real-life moments, complemented by text on screen to emphasize key information, quotes, or messages
Film Music / Sound Design	Ambient and Emotional textures with minimal elements to let natural sounds and dialogue breathe.